
Wood Effect Tiles for Floors and Walls: 30 Nicest Porcelain and Ceramic Designs

This beautiful selection of porcelain and ceramic wood effect tiles is an important addition to our original wood look tile collection. As we've found a few more amazing looking tile designs, we had to include them as well, possibly making the combination of the two collections the most comprehensive resource on the web for wood effect tiles. We were very careful to select only the nicest, most realistic wood grain designs. As a main difference from real wood planks, these faux wood tiles can also be used successfully on floors and walls, requiring the same type of installation for either application. Most of this style of tile is produced by Italian manufacturers, as they are the best in the business. The main difference between porcelain and ceramic tile is the quality and the price, with the porcelain one being a bit higher in both. Read on for brand names and ideas.

Modern Wood Effect Tiles for All Decor Styles

There is nothing more beautiful than a wood floor; unfortunately those of us who have dogs and/or young children know that a wood floor is not a viable solution. However, ceramic tiles can offer the effect of wood without the scratch factor and that means the floor looks good for a very long time. And they don't even have to be cold underfoot anymore thanks to the large advances in heated floor technology. My personal favorite in modern flooring is wood effect tiles used throughout the home for a continuous story. They are gorgeous, functional and easy to look after so what's not to like about them?

The above rectified porcelain wall and floor tiles by Sil Ceramiche are from their Shabby Style collection. The beauty of imperfections of the aged wood is what makes these designs so appealing to a contemporary taste.
